Alan Hilton

Alan Hilton can be named among the great and the good. He was great through his life's work for the profession, for his continuing support of continuing professional education long before that discipline was officially recognised, and for his support of the Manchester Medical Society recognised through his Presidential Year in the Section of Odontology (1959/1960) and culminating in the ultimate honour of President of the Society (1968/69). He was good through his continuing care of patients in his practice long after most dentists would have sought the comfort of retirement and through his interest in and encouragement of junior members of the profession. The first Alan Hilton medal was presented in 1986.
