

I went to medical school at University College London and enjoyed every minute of that. Having completed my house jobs, I tossed a coin between medicine and surgery and ended up doing a surgical rotation to gain my MRCS. I dabbled for a few years in Orthopaedics and then saw the light!

Having volunteered at a Mission hospital in South Africa for 6 months, which was an amazing experience, I entered Radiology training in Manchester.

I am now a non-vascular interventional radiologist at the Manchester Royal Infirmary.

I sub specialise in HPB diagnostics and intervention. I am lucky enough to be involved in innovative techniques in interventional oncology. I am also involved in the Greater Manchester Trauma Network which allows me to participate in developing services in imaging with respect to trauma.

I enjoy teaching a training.

My hobby is baking and decorating cakes which allows me to explore my creative side. I am also a bit of a feeder, so I try and share what I make!

My wonderful family keep me on my toes the rest of the time. My weekends are spent on cold touchlines and side-lines or mountain biking, usually somewhere wet.....
